History

The community of Boulder Junction traces its roots back to 1903, when railroad tracks were laid through this beautiful corner of Wisconsin's Northwoods. Though the rail line was built for the shipment of white pine logs, it also became a pipeline for hunters and anglers who flocked to this untouched area. A number of resorts popped up to serve the growing number of vacationers.

In the 1930s, a Chicago sportswriter who regularly vacationed in Boulder Junction coined the phrase, "Musky Capital of the World," a label which stuck, due to the fact that more musky are caught from Boulder Junction area lakes than any other similarly sized area. The phrase was awarded a trademark in 1971.

To learn more about Boulder Junction's history visit the Boulder Junction Historical Museum located next to the community center. The museum is open Memorial Day to Labor Day, Tuesdays and Saturdays from 10am to 2pm. Admission is free. There is also a Boulder Junction History Book available at a number of locations throughout town.

We've got the best places to rest.

Fish of Boulder Junction

Boulder Junction offers some of the best fishing in the state of Wisconsin. With 194 lakes within nine miles of town, the fishing options are tremendous.

Boulder Junction is home to more than 50 class-A musky lakes, making it one of the best places in North America to catch a trophy musky. But the Musky Capital of the World® has more than just muskies — the area also boasts some of the best walleye, bass and panfish angling in the Midwest. Add in the spectacular scenery and you have the perfect fishing destination.

Whether you're a hard-core musky angler, aspiring bass-master, fly-fishing trout hunter or a parent taking their kids out for their first fishing adventure, you're going to love Boulder Junction.

For current fishing reports and more information on area lakes, visit www.boulderjct.org.
